EXAMINATION IS SUGGESTED FOR EVERY FIVE YEARS

Motor Vehicle Commissioner Eynon Says Such Is Recommended FOR AUTO OPERATORS

Believe Accidents Will Be Fewer if Physical Defects Are Checked

HARRISBURG, Jan. 17.—It has been suggested to Motor Vehicle Commissioner Benjamin G. Eynon that the Motor Code be amended so as to provide that every operator of a motor vehicle be compelled once in five years to undergo an examination as to his fitness and ability.

"I understand," said Commissioner Eynon today, "that an amendment to this effect has already been prepared and will be submitted to the legislature in February. It will mean a tremendous amount of work for the State Highway Patrol, but sponsors of the proposed change declare that examinations are necessary."

"Of the more than 2,000,000 operators, registered in Pennsylvania, scores of thousands were never examined. The law providing for drivers' examinations did not compel persons already operating to take the test. As is well known, three per cent of those we examine today fail to make the grade—hence it is natural to believe that thousands of card holders who did not take the examination would fail if compelled to demonstrate their fitness and ability."

"Each year the Highway Patrol examines 300,000 new drivers. If the law were to require that every five years the entire driving population of Pennsylvania undergo examination, a certain number each year, the total examinations would approximate 750,000 or 800,000 annually."

"It is urged by proponents of this change that so long as the Commonwealth requires mechanical fitness in motor vehicles it seems odd that similar fitness is not required of all drivers. It is certainly true that much may happen to a man in ten or fifteen years to reduce or destroy his efficiency. Whether the legislature will take this view of the proposition I do not know."

Four Answer Summons

By "The Stroller"

During the past few weeks, the grim harvester "Death" has been unusually active among the members of the local Order of Elks. Four well-known citizens have recently received the summons and passed through the rite, to take up their residence in the spirit land beyond. Harry Headley, Charles Williamson, Franklin Gilkeson, and this afternoon the mortal remains of Harry Arnold, were laid to rest in the Bristol Cemetery. Recently I stood before the funeral of a departed brother, and listened to the simple but impressive services which were conducted by the officers of Bristol Lodge. A few words spoken by the Exalted Ruler seemed to fasten themselves in my mind, and kept repeating themselves over and over again. These words were: "The Golden Hour of Memory." A few evenings afterward, with these words still fresh in memory, I picked up some paper and pencil and comfortably seated in an easy chair, gave full reign to my thoughts and began to write.

"The Golden Hour of Memory"

The Golden Hour of Memory, with tenderness it brings, Sweet visions of the absent ones, to whom the heart still clings, Where'er its magic power is felt, from out the realms of space, We feel the touch of outstretched arms and rest in their embrace.

We stand beside the open grave, brot'n and sad, and lone, And face the unknown future, from which all hope has flown, But with the passing years we find, while time our griefs allure, The "Golden Hour of Memory," holds treasures that endure.

Eleven is Elksdom's mystic hour, a time of recollection, The "Golden Hour of Memory," and happy retrospection; 'Tis then the heart of Elksdom swells—we share with one another, Kneeling at memory's shrine—our grief for him, our Absent Brother.

Elksdom knows no unkind thought—in deference to God's plan, It tries the human touch to give, and be a friend to man, The faults of brothers it would write, in the sand beside the sea, Their virtues upon tablets of love and memory.

The Charity it practices is seen in acts of cheer, For Elksdom uses kindly deeds, to dry the falling tear, Where'er sorrow is or want, or sickness, or distress, There Elksdom stands with ready hands, to help, to cheer, to bless.

"This Mystic Hour of Elksdom comes, with shadows of the night, When the earth is wrapped in sleep, and day has taken flight; When wheels of commerce cease to grind, and hearts are quiet, still, Then comes this tender Golden Hour, its blessings to fulfill."

Apparently the Elks have found, in this "Hour of Memory," The realization and the hope of immortality— A secret mystic tie that winds around the hearts of men, And binds them to the spirit land, where all shall meet again.

BOYS LEFT CHURCH TO STEAL CAR; WRECKED IT

Trio Now in House of Detention in Montgomery County

MAKE A CONFESSION

HORSHAM, Jan. 17.—Three Horsham school boys yesterday confessed to stealing an automobile the night after Christmas. They sneaked out of the church where the Yuletide service was being held, just long enough to steal a car, run it into a ditch and then get back into church before the Christmas service was over.

The boys today are in the House of Detention at the Montgomery County Prison at Norristown in default of $800 bail apiece. They are: Horace A. Moss, fifteen; Harold H. Lee, fourteen; and Otto C. Lintner, thirteen, all of Horsham.

Before Corporal William Engle and Patrolman Riley Fitzsimmons, of the Edison sub-station of State Highway Patrol they confessed yesterday to stealing an automobile belonging to Franklin P. Luff, of Newtown.

According to the confession the boys' mothers sent them to the Grace Presbyterian Church at Horsham on the night of December 26 to attend the Christmas entertainment. Outside the church, Luff's car was parked. The boys saw Luff seated in the church and while the program was in progress they quietly left the church unnoticed and started away in Luff's car.

Near the Horsham Flying Field, the lights on Luff's car went out and Moss, who was driving the car, lost control and the car struck a pole, causing considerable damage. The youths ran back to the church, over a mile away and took their seats to listen to the few remaining recitations and songs of the exercises. They left the church as if nothing had happened and saw Luff looking for his automobile.

The car was later recovered but it was not until recently that the Highway officers received a tip as to who the guilty youths might be.

Moss confessed first. He told the officers that he had taken a car the Sunday before the theft of the Luff car simply "to take a ride." Then Lee and Lintner confessed to being with Moss who they described as "the leader of the gang."

The case will be taken into Court because of the increased number of cases of malicious mischief in the Horsham district.

Enterprise Comes Home," leader, Mrs. Rilla Hunter; worship with sermon by the pastor at 7.45 p. m., theme, "The Victory of Little Faith."

A very important meeting of the male members of the church will be held in the church parlor on Monday evening, at 8 o'clock. All men of the church are urged to be present.

AUTO MURDER IDEA DROPPED; RELEASE PAIR

Authorities Convinced Man Was Accidentally Killed by Auto

CAR THEFT CHECKED UP

TRENTON, N. J., Jan. 17.—Convinced that Andrew Koleski, 21 years old, of 21 Turpin street, who was found fatally injured along the Lincoln Highway, near Langhorne, on Tuesday night, was not "put on the spot," Bucks County authorities yesterday released two Trenton men who were being held for questioning concerning the death.

The men, John Koveski, 29 years old, of 193 Humboldt street, and George Nelson, 21 years old, of 338 Perry street, were freed from the Bucks County Prison, where they were confined following their arrest here on Wednesday.

A check-up on the activities of Koleski on the night of his fatal ride made here on Thursday by Corporal Francis, of the Doylestown State Police; Trooper Schneider, of the Langhorne Highway Patrol, and County Detective Russo, of Bristol, is said to have revealed that the youth, while under the influence of liquor, stole an automobile belonging to Fred Palmer, of Hamilton Township, and was last seen zig-zagging down South Warren street toward the Delaware River bridge. Koveski, Nelson and Clifford Naylor, of South Broad street, all declared that they were in the vicinity when this occurred.

Pennsylvania State Police now believe that Koleski crashed into a pole somewhere along the highway, tearing the front bumper for the car loose, and that he then rode for some distance with the bumper dragging. It is thought that he may have then left the machine and started walking back toward Trenton, being hit by another car.

In the belief that Koleski may have had companions on the ride, and that he may have been "put on the spot," Bucks County authorities looked up his associates here, and questioned them, holding Koveski and Nelson when they were not satisfied with their stories of what they had been doing on Tuesday night. After further questioning at Langhorne, they were (Continued on Page 4)

Calendar Social Enjoyed At First Baptist Church

The calendar social held in the First Baptist Church last night was a decided success. The seats were arranged in a circle of twelve segments representing the months of the year, and white and blue crepe paper was used to decorate the room. Streamers holding the several months of the year were hung over each group in the circle. Eight girls dressed in the national colors ushered the people to seats representing the month of their birth.

The program of the evening followed the months in their order on the calendar. Miss Marie Watson, dressed as a fortune teller, gave a short astrological reading for each month and told of famous men and women born in each month.

Following this reading a suitable event was enjoyed. For January, a game, "Trip Around the World"; for February, "A Valentine Hunt"; for March, a solo, "Mother Machree"; Miss Mildred Dyer, and a potato race; for April, "Bible Baseball Contest"; for May, a solo, "Old Fashioned Cottage"; William Marshall; for June, mock wedding, preacher, William Marshall; bride, Vera Donnell; groom, Laura Ellis.

After the games and contests all joined in a circle of fellowship and sang, "Living for Jesus."

Refreshments of fruit punch and soda crackers were served. The ushers were: Ruth Weik, Doris Hendricks, Noma Johnson, Elizabeth Mariner, Margaret Quinn, Thelma Weik, Janice Muffett, May Van Horn.

BROTHER ATTORNEYS ARE COURT OPPONENTS

Represent Opposing Clients in Civil Suit Now Before The Court

HULMEVILLE FIRM LOSES

DOYLESTOWN, Jan. 17.—Two brothers are representing their clients as attorneys on opposite sides in the trial of a damage case in civil court here.

Thomas Ross, of Doylestown, is counsel for C. K. Williams & Company, Easton automobile dealer, in a suit against Michael S. Volpe, who is represented by George Ross. The action was started as a result of an automobile collision on the Lackawanna Trail near Ottsville last November. The defendant is a resident of Montgomery county.

Judge Calvin S. Boyer directed that a voluntary non-suit be entered in the case of Easton Overland Company, of Easton, against Good Brothers, of Ottsville.

In the case of the Tab Electric Supply Company, Inc., of Trenton, against H. W. Johnson and Bruce J. Anderson, trading as Johnson and Anderson, of Hulmeville, a jury awarded the plaintiff a verdict for $156.25. The case was tried before Judge Hiram H. Keller.

In an action of assumpsit growing out of the sale of a bill of tires and accessories, a jury yesterday awarded The Mohawk Rubber Co., a New York corporation, a verdict for $2,000 in a suit brought against H. Anna Taylor, of New Hope. The case was tried before Judge Keller. It was testified that the defendant became the guarantor of an account of Harry V. Taylor.

Judge Keller yesterday directed a compulsory non-suit on motion of counsel for the defense in the case of Edward Narducci, by his mother and next friend, Mary Narducci, against Albert A. Roesechen.

The plaintiff, Narducci, who lives in Treviso, testified that Roesechen shot his dog. In defense, Roesechen testified that Narducci's dog killed a number of his chickens and played havoc in general with his farm fowls. A witness for the plaintiff said that he saw the dog at Roesechen's place on one occasion and that the dog "was bothering the chickens."

WORTHLESS CHECK RACKET BEING WORKED

Women Reaping A Harvest From Merchants in Bucks County

VICTIMS ARE NUMEROUS

The young woman who managed to swindle a Bristol produce merchant out of $4.52 is working the same game elsewhere, according to reports coming from Doylestown. She also got a victim in the county seat.

In Doylestown two women passed worthless checks on at least two merchants and attempted it with a third, but the latter escaped because employees informed the woman they were not permitted to cash checks.

In Bristol last Tuesday morning a woman visited the Philadelphia Fruit & Produce Market, Mill street. She ordered produce to the amount of $5.48 to be delivered to 1115 Radcliffe street. The woman gave in payment a check drawn to the order of cash for $10 and a boy gave her $4.52 change.

When an attempt was made to cash the check it was found worthless and there was no such address as 1115 Radcliffe street. The name signed to the check was "John Bennett."

Now the same woman, apparently, worked the same racket in Doylestown a few days previous. In Doylestown the woman even went to the trouble to pretend to lease an apartment. She gave a $15 check to a provision merchant and received about $6 in change, the amount due her over the sale. She directed that the produce be taken to an apartment and told where the key could be gotten.

On the door of the apartment was the name she had given, "John Bennett," and it was learned that she was talking of leasing it. Disarmed of any suspicion he might have had, the employee left the "order" and depended on the explanation of the woman that she would return Saturday, but by Tuesday she had not appeared. Going to the apartment the merchant found practically all of the "order" except some oranges and some ginger ale.

The woman was well dressed and about 30 years of age and the description tallies with that of the woman who swindled the Bristol merchant. The checks in both instances were drawn on a Springfield, Mass., bank. It is the same woman, it is believed, who went to a bakery, ate some ice cream and then gave an order amounting to about $4, taking about two dollars worth of things with her. She gave a check for payment but was told the employees were not permitted to cash them.

"But I've had the ice cream," she said, "and I would like to take some of these things to my apartment and (Continued on Page 3)

"DIVINING ROD" FINDING WATER ON DRY FARMS

PENNSBURG, Jan. 17.—Science claims no basis for the popular belief that underground water, oil, mineral deposits and hidden treasures can be located by means of a forked twig carried over the surface in a certain manner.

Yet a young Pennsylvanian has used this method of locating water in this section of the upper Perkiomen Valley and claims that his system has never once failed him.

John J. Rothmund, 25, of Finland, several miles east of here, has taken time to help out his neighbors in Montgomery and Bucks counties in the water shortage resulting from the summer's drought. He has located water for 12 since fall.

The method used has been frequently referred to as the divining rod system, and, although its use dates back to the fifteenth century, belief in it has pretty generally died out. Farmers who followed Rothmund's instructions in drilling for water declare

WORKMEN'S AUTOS ARE DRIVEN OVER NEW BRIDGE HERE

Span Not Open to Public Traffic, However; Make Good Progress

LIGHTS ARE ON TOWERS

Final Rivets Being Driven In Some Portions; Test Lift Span

First vehicles to pass over the bridge which is being built across the Delaware River, are the automobiles and trucks of the workmen.

From the offices of Ash, Howard, Needles & Tamman, engineers on the Burlington-Bristol span, today it was stated that machines have been operated across the river on this new structure. This gives to the populace an idea of how near to completion the bridge is at this time.

Most of the structural work is completed, and odd jobs are being carried out by workmen. In several parts of the span final rivets are being driven.

In order to protect aviators, who sometimes are forced to fly low owing to weather conditions, lights have been placed on the lift towers. These are visible for three miles. On several occasions during the past few weeks the lift span has been raised and lowered as engineers tested the apparatus. The Burlington-Bristol bridge, when completed, will be the longest vertical lift span in the world.

It is expected that the bridge will be opened to traffic about the middle of April. The concrete roadway is finished, and already a few people have walked across on this, although the bridge is not yet open to the public even for foot traffic.

Not until after the bridge is finished is the state highway which will connect it on the Burlington side to be finished, according to the engineers. The roadway is not complete where a grade crossing is made over the Pennsylvania Railroad tracks in Burlington.

Address to Leaguers Given By Mrs. Pimm, of Camden

HULMEVILLE, Jan. 17.—Mrs. I. S. Pimm, of Camden, N. J., was the speaker at the bi-monthly rally of the Bristol Group Epworth League in the Neshaminy M. E. Church, here last evening.

Taking as her topic "I came that ye might have life, and have it more abundantly," Mrs. Pimm gave a most helpful talk.

"True happiness which is being sought after by many in this life is the rightful heritage of every one of us," stated the speaker. "And this great happiness promised in the Gospel is the glorious message of Jesus Christ to all who will seek and find that true happiness."

Referring to the purpose of life the one delivering the address remarked "Christ provides the purpose and goal for every life that is presented to him, and to live for Him is goal enough for any life; and He guarantees that He will keep that life busy at all times. The more abundant life is one of activity."

The rally last night was presided over by Howard Phillips, of Langhorne, group president. Rev. Alexander B. Davidson, pastor of the Treviso M. E. Church, offered the prayer, and the benediction was pronounced by the Rev. Francis E. Walz, pastor of the hostess church.

Two vocal numbers were given by Mrs. Pimm, the first one being "I Heard the Voice of Jesus Say." Miss Marie Hanson accompanied at the piano.

An invitation was extended by the Treviso Epworth League for the March rally to be held in that church. The date will be Friday, the 27th.

Attendance and percentage banners were both presented to the Bristol Epworth League.

Refreshments were served by the Hulmeville league members.

ATTACKING A FARM PROBLEM

Passage of the agricultural marketing act started a hue and cry among commission men and wholesalers of farm produce against the use of government funds to set up agencies in direct competition with their businesses. Their opposition was overridden because the act promised to cut down the size of the machine required to get a unit of farm produce to the consumer's table and to set up machinery whereby the spread between farm and retail prices might be reduced and the savings divided between the farmer and consumer.

The dairy advisory committee, organized under the marketing act to represent dairy cooperative associations, is now putting the act to work for the benefit of producer and consumer and at the expense of middlemen's profits.

The reduced buying power of the public in the present depression has resulted in a constantly declining demand for dairy products, with the result that farm prices for such products have declined until they now stand at a level beneath the cost of production in many sections. But the retail price has not declined in the same percentage because of agencies which can maintain an artificial price level.

So the dairy advisory committee starts a retail price slashing movement to stimulate consumer buying. Increased consumption will take the surplus off the farms and force up prices paid the farmer by the wholesaler. This is made possible by the cooperatives, which can to a large extent control prices.

A DUAL AIR SERVICE

A military problem of 15 years' standing finds a partial solution in an agreement just reached by the chiefs of the two military services. This agreement, however, will not bring to an end a controversy as old as the problem and as provocative in military circles as the question, "Who won the war—the army or the navy?"

This treaty between army and navy chiefs concerns the air service, and provides that the air forces of the army and navy will be left free "each to develop within well-defined limits and each with a separate and distinct mission." This means that army planes must confine their activities to land service and coast defense at home and abroad, while navy aircraft will be based on the fleet and will move with it.

While this eliminates some sources of friction between the two air services, actual service will show many conflicts of authority and a need for interpretation of duties. These can be removed only through unification of the fighting fleets under one command.

If the air defense develops during the next 15 years as it has in the last decade and a half, it will be of sufficient importance and magnitude to justify the unification of the air forces into a third arm, under its own discipline and administration, and, perhaps, with its own secretary in the president's cabinet.

The family tree is a unique variety. The others all shed their rotten branches.

Posterity will be safe, after all. It can't be very wild while paying off the bond issues.

"FOREST LOVE" by HAZEL LIVINGSTON

After giving up Mat Tully because he is poor, Nancy Hollenbeck encourages the attentions of Jack Beamer, wealthy sportsman. Jack plans to divorce his wife and marry Nancy. On a mountain trip, Nancy falls in love with Roger Decatur, handsome ranger. She leaves her chaperones, the wealthy Porters, and secretly marries Roger. Nancy is happy with Roger in his rough mountain cabin, but when he leaves on a trip, the loneliness is unbearable and she returns home. She continues to keep her marriage a secret. Jack Beamer sends flowers. Nancy and her sister, Lou, attend the engagement party of May Belle Craig.

CHAPTER XXVI

WHEN it was obvious that there was no way out of it, Gil got up, looking smaller and sandier, and more earnest than ever in his black velvet costume of a Venetian gentleman, and fixing his mother with a nervous eye, mumbled, "Thank you very much for all your good wishes. I'm sure that we—of—that is I—am very lucky," and sat down, amid a patter of polite applause and his mother's honest laughter.

Gil's mother was the only person who really enjoyed the dinner. Nancy, sitting next to Fred Galan, smiled brightly, brilliantly at his sister's stupid sallies. But she didn't hear a word he said. The Craig's new butler was sunburnt and yellow-headed . . . like Roger. She couldn't keep her eyes off him. She turned her head, following him around the table so that he thought she wanted something and came back, offering second helpings. That embarrassed her, and she laughed, more shrilly, more gayly at Fred . . . she MUST stop worrying about Roger . . . she MUST listen to Fred Galan . . . Oh, Roger darling, why do you have to be a ranger . . . why can't you be here?

An Ordeal

Louise, marooned between the bridegroom-to-be and a man whose name she couldn't remember, sat silent, studying Helel Heffinger. What could anyone see in her? Selfishness and greed stuck out all over her. Well, Mat Tully wasn't here to see it.

Conversation languished, flared, died and flared again. Only Gil's mother was happy. But Myra Neal, who could have been a social dictator if she had not been too indolent to dictate, always enjoyed herself. If not, she found some strange and wonderful excuse and went home to bed. She would have been equal to walking out in the middle of the festivities to-night, and poor Mr. Craig, breathing hard, trying to entertain Mr. Neal, watch the new butler, and see that May Belle didn't drink too much, knew it.

It was a relief when "the mob" arrived, and the carnival began in earnest.

Gil seized a cocktail shaker and led the way to the butler's pantry. Here with oranges, gin and ice at hand, he began to feel more like himself.

"After the ball is over—"

"After the ladies are gone—"

May Belle sang in a manly baritone, with one hand on her heart.

"Atta girl, May Belle!"

"Hear, hear!"

May Belle's piquant freckled face was radiant now, her white satin costume, thickly sewn with sequins was a blaze of light. "The life of the party, all right," the nearsighted young man who was dancing with Louise told her.

"Yes, indeed, May Belle is always so animated," the middle-aged man murmured. "It used to be Nancy who was the life of the party. She thought, sadly, with a backward glance for her sister who stood with an uninteresting looking youth at one of the long windows that gave on the garden.

As she looked Nancy's velvet eyes opened wide, her lips moved, she put one hand out in a half-frightened, half-welcoming gesture.

A tall man was coming up the path in the moonlight. It was plain that he had seen the girl in the window. Suddenly he began to run toward her, leaving the path, leaping over flower beds and rockery. Automatically, like a wound-up toy, Louise went on dancing. But she had seen Nancy's white, frightened face. Something was going to happen . . . something terrible . . .

"I beg your pardon," her partner murmured with rising annoyance. For the second time in two minutes the plain Hollenbeck girl had stepped on his foot.

"The moon belongs to everyone," "The best things in life are free!"

Uninvited Guest

The dancers were singing. Even Louise. Even Louise's partner, whose toe, he was quite sure, was broken. For you can't make a scene at a party, even if your sister is making a fool of herself, or your tenderest toe has been trod on.

"He has his nerve," May Belle giggled, whirling by with Gil Neal. "Mother took particular pains not to invite him."

"Oh, that's Jack Beamer all over," Gil said easily. "He goes wherever he wants to, invited or not. Rather a compliment that he came. Means he heard it was going to be a good party."

"Good party nothing!" May Belle returned with a touch of her mother's tartness. "He heard Nancy Hollenbeck was going to be here, that's all. Didn't you see him jump over the dahlia bed and climb in the French window when he saw her? He gives me a pain!"

Gil Neal, happy to have May Belle in his arms, happy that everyone, even the blase Beamer, seemed to be having a good time, just laughed. "Gee, May, don't pick on him. There are lots of fellows here who aren't invited. It would be a frost if a mob didn't come!"

"Well," May Belle admitted grudgingly, it WAS nice to be able to say Jack Beamer came, even if mother WOULD have a fit.

What really upset her was Nancy. You could never depend on Nancy Hollenbeck to keep her place. You asked her partly because you had to, and partly because she was good at keeping people amused. And just when you were feeling really grateful to her for brightening up a dull corner and making things move, she'd like as not spoil everything by stealing the best man and hogging the spotlight.

Of course Gil is the best man! May Belle reassured herself loyally, but just the same, Jack Beamer is the most showy, and I don't think it's very good taste for her to make herself conspicuous like that at MY party!

"Look at them," she complained aloud. "Doing a solo dance—hogging the whole floor . . . nerve I call it!"

Gil followed her indignant gaze. Jack Beamer, the only man not in costume, had stolen a red silk sash from someone and tied it around his waist. Nancy had a pair of castanets, her high bubbling laugh rose above the music, which had changed to something Spanish and lilting; the saxophone was still. Somebody shook a tambourine, Frank Haworth picked up the melody on his guitar.

"Look, they're doing the fandango!"

The other dancers had stopped dancing. Everyone was crowding to watch the couple in the middle of the floor. Jack Beamer threw back his head and laughed. He made an absurdly graceful bow to Nancy. Her bright bronze head almost touched the floor, she courted so low. The castanets clicked, they were dancing. Fandango? Beamer didn't know, he was making it up as he went along, but it didn't matter. Nancy's high-arched feet in the black satin slippers kept unfailing step with his. Her hooped skirts, patterned with soft crimson, gold-hearted roses, shadowed with tier after tier of cobwebby black lace, swayed as she swung herself wildly into the rhythm. Her cheeks were carmine. One narrow black satin shoulder strap slipped from a creamy shoulder. The rhinestones on her throat and wrists flashed in the bright, white light.

Old Gilbert Neal, Sr., stumping through the ballroom with his wife on his arm, stopped and stared.

"My word!" he said.

Mrs. Neal fumbled for her lorgnette and focussed it on the breathless, laughing girl.

"A real beauty, eh Myra?" Mrs. Neal lowered her lorgnette and shook her head. "Yes, and a real tragedy I'm afraid, my dear. She's old Senator Peebles' granddaughter. Kitty, the daughter, married somebody or other—Hollenbeck I think the name is—dear, dear . . ."

"But a girl like that, Myra! Temperament, style, fire! She'll go far without any help."

"Too far. Did you see Jack Beamer's eyes? Well, it's none of my business, I'm glad all my girls were boys."

The dance was over. There was a roar of applause, and then somebody started a stampede for the buffet.

"Who said the gin was out? It's a darn lie!" a triumphant Venetian gentleman who had had more than his share already bellowed above the din.

Jack picked up a velvet wrap someone had left on a chair, and put it over Nancy's bare shoulders.

"Where are these here new gondolas they've been bleating about?" They slipped out of the open French window by which he had entered an hour ago.

Mat Tully was late. First he had decided not to come, costume parties make a man feel like such a fool. But at the last minute he thought he might as well, and went down to Goldstein, the costumers, for something to wear.

"A Venetian costume?" the salesman repeated hopefully. "I'm afraid—I'm really afraid that about everything is gone. There's a big society affair tonight and so many gentlemen . . . how would you like a nice bull fighter's outfit?"

Anticipation

In the end they fitted him out in dark green tights and a leather jumper slashed with orange and yellow. It was quite a nice costume and Mat rather fancied himself in it, though he had a sneaking suspicion it was intended for Robin Hood, or Peter Pan. Still nobody is fussy about details like that, he consoled himself, driving fast to make up for lost time. Nancy Hollenbeck was back from her long vacation, he had heard, and, of course, she'd be there.

He mused about that, bumping along over the highway in his ratty old car. He had been awfully in love with her last Spring. Maybe he was still . . .

She wasn't on the floor when he got there. Half of the crowd had drifted down to the river, where the lanterns on the little boats bobbed like fireflies over the water. Some of the more convivial spirits had joined hands around the punch bowl and were singing.

"I'm a son of a son of a son of a—" with great feeling and not too much harmony.

Why Commute?

Why travel back and forth to your employment, which is here in Bristol, when such desirable dwellings are to be obtained here at such reasonable rents? It will pay any individual to investigate!

Work Where You Live and Live Where You Work.

If you are employed in Bristol you should live here. It will be less expensive and there are numerous other advantages derived from making your home in the town where you are employed.

You will save many hours a year which are now spent in traveling and you will have more time with your family.

The saving in money will also be considerable. Add to that which you are now paying for rent the amount which you spend in traveling back and forth to your employment here. You'll be surprised at the total. Rent a house here at a moderate rental and bank the difference.

Houses.

Comfortable dwellings, well situated and at moderate rents are to be found in that portion of Bristol which is immediately adjacent to the P. R. R. passenger station.

These houses make ideal homes and consist of six rooms with bath.

Conveniences.

They are heated by hot-air furnaces with a direct pipe leading to every room. They are lighted with electricity and are equipped with sewer, municipal water and gas.

Each room is well lighted and yet the space devoted to windows is not excessive.

Front porches are another attractive feature as is also a small rear yard where children can play in safety away from the perils of traffic.

Houses such as these would rent for considerably more in any city, where the conveniences would not surpass those offered here.

National Farm School To Be Pattern for Another

FARM SCHOOL, Jan. 17.—With a plan in view to establish a farm school

The Meanest Man

By Milt Gross

In New Mexico similar to National Farm School where Indians can receive training in agriculture without cost to them, United States government officials and other notable authorities made an inspection trip of the school yesterday.

E. B. Dale, superintendent of the "Charles H. Burke Indian School,"

Fort Wingate, New Mexico, and James Arentson, head of the Indian Office, Department of the Interior, Washington, D. C., headed the party.

They made a brief study of the school methods used and were particularly interested in the farm mechanics building, the only one of its kind in the East where farm mechanics is taught in every detail in a practical way.

On the "Charles H. Burke Indian Farm" in New Mexico, 600 Indians are being taught agriculture on 20,000 acres owned and operated by the United States.

"Our trip here today was well worth while," said the New Mexico farm superintendent. "We have been able to learn many things that will be of great advantage to our school. I certainly want to compliment the faculty of Farm School for the service they are rendering in the promotion and advancement of agriculture. I intend to have a number of your methods adopted immediately upon my return home."

The New Mexico representative made the trip from his home to Chicago by airplane and will return by the same route.

turned over to District Attorney Arthur N. Eastburn, at Doylestown, and lodged in the jail there without a specific charge brought against them.

The funeral of Koleski will be held from his late home, 23 Turpin street, on Monday morning at 9.30 o'clock with requiem high mass at St. Mary's Greek Catholic Church. Interment will be in St. Mary's Greek Cemetery, under the direction of John T. Mullen.

Besides his parents, Koleski is survived by two sisters and a brother.

Both Koleski and Kovelski have long records of petty crime. Koleski served six terms in the Workhouse since November, 1928, according to Warden Bethke. He was committed on each occasion by Police Judge Brennan for disorderly conduct. In 1927 Koleski served a term in the Rahway Reformatory for grand larceny and breaking and entering, according to Bethke's records.

Kovelski served a year in the Workhouse under the alias, "Johnny Bundy," according to Bethke. He served the term from 1928 to 1929. Upon his release in September of 1929 he was recommitted for 90 days on a disorderly conduct charge. Kovelski also served time in Rahway. He was sentenced to the reformatory in 1924 for robbery and violation of parole.

Helpful Advice to Girls

By NANCY LEE.

DEAR NANCY LEE:

I am a girl 16 years of age. I have liked a boy, one year my senior, for a year, and I am quite sure he liked me.

But lately, very childishly, I have snubbed him. Now he pays no attention to me, but goes out with other girls.

Dear Nancy Lee, this is my question: I am very fond of this boy, and would like to know how I could again gain his attention. Please don't tell me that I must suffer for my own foolishness, because I don't see how I could bear it. Your advice will mean a great deal to me. Thank you.

CURLY LOCKS:

But you are suffering for your foolishness, regardless of anything I might say. Should the occasion present itself, why not tell him quietly and sincerely that you are sorry, if you have inadvertently hurt him. If there is any chivalry in him, he will be proud to resume the friendship. If he doesn't appreciate your conduct, then he is just a spoiled youngster, and should be ignored in future as far as you are concerned.

DEAR NANCY LEE: I am a boy of twenty-two and I have met a girl of twenty-one. I love her very much and she loves me the same. I want to marry her at this age. Will you please tell me if it's all right for me to marry her or must I wait a little longer.

L. B.: There are other things to be considered besides your age. If a man is 32 years of age and unable to provide a home for and keep his wife, he would not be fit to marry. And so if your financial status will permit it, I would say, and you have your own parents' consent, that the matter of age is unimportant as you are both some what more than children. Good luck to you both.

Sport's Spellbinding Names

By HARDIN BURNLEY

MANY actors and some authors have long known the public value of catchy names; hence many a celebrated nom de theatre and plume. Sports stars also benefit by having, or adopting, names that capture fan imagination. Just for universal example, think of the dynamic punch that the words "Jack Dempsey" convey either when read or heard. And Babe Ruth—the soul of every baseball fan re-echoes with the fancied home run bang of his bat every time he reads his name or hears it pronounced!

Then there's Dazzy Vance—those vibrant letters fairly zip along with the steam that characterizes his fast ball. Rube Waddell, Amos Rusie, and a score of other historic pitchers had names which read and sound like terrific speed. All baseball records are loaded
